

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

January 5, 2012

S. 1793
Investigative Assistance for Violent Crimes Act of 2011

As reported by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on November 17, 2011

CBO estimates that implementing S. 1793 would have no significant cost to the federal government. Enacting the bill would not affect direct spending or revenues; therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures do not apply.

S. 1793 would clarify the authority of the Department of Justice (DOJ) to assist state and local governments in investigating certain violent crimes. The bill also would raise, from $2 million to $3 million, the maximum reward that DOJ may offer for public assistance in solving crimes. Based on information from DOJ about rewards paid in recent years, CBO expects very few rewards to exceed $2 million. Thus, we estimate that S. 1793 would have no significant effect on department spending (rewards are paid from appropriated funds).

S. 1793 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments.

On July 28, 2011, CBO transmitted a cost estimate for H.R. 2076, the Investigative Assistance for Violent Crimes Act of 2011, as ordered reported by the House Committee on the Judiciary on July 21, 2011. The two pieces of legislation are identical, as are the cost estimates.

The CBO staff contact for this estimate is Mark Grabowicz. The estimate was approved by Theresa Gullo, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.