

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

November 3, 2014

H.R. 3770 Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection—Inspector General Reform Act of 2013

As ordered reported by the House Committee on Financial Services on June 11, 2014

SUMMARY

H.R. 3770 would direct the President to appoint an Inspector General for the Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection (CFPB) within 60 days of enactment, and would require the CFPB to set aside 2 percent of its annual funding to operate the office of the Inspector General. Under the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, which established the CFPB, the responsibilities of the Federal Reserve Office of Inspector General (OIG) were broadened to include the CFPB (that office is currently known as the OIG of the Federal Reserve Board of Governors and the CFPB). H.R. 3770 would authorize the Federal Reserve OIG to serve in that position until a new Inspector General for the CFPB is confirmed. At that time, the responsibilities of the Federal Reserve OIG would not include oversight of the CFPB.

CBO estimates that enacting H.R. 3770 would increase direct spending by $100 million over the 2015-2024 period. Further, enacting H.R. 3770 would increase revenues by $51 million over the 2015-2024 period, reflecting lower costs for the Federal Reserve OIG. Taking those effects together, CBO estimates that enacting H.R. 3770 would increase budget deficits by $49 million over the ten-year period.

Pay-as-you-go procedures apply because enacting the legislation would affect direct spending and revenues. CBO estimates that implementing H.R. 3770 would not affect discretionary costs.

H.R. 3770 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) and would not affect the budgets of state, local, or tribal governments.

ESTIMATED COST TO THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The estimated budgetary effect of H.R. 3770 is shown in the following table. The costs of this legislation fall within budget function 370 (commerce and housing credit).

BASIS OF ESTIMATE

The CFPB is permanently authorized to spend amounts transferred from the Federal Reserve System; because such spending is not subject to appropriation, CFPB expenditures are recorded in the budget as direct spending. Furthermore, the earnings of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System are remitted to the Treasury and recorded in the budget as revenues; thus, any change to the costs of the Federal Reserve System are recorded in the budget as changes in revenues.

When the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act established the CFPB, the responsibilities of the Federal Reserve OIG were broadened to include the CFPB. H.R. 3770 would direct the President to appoint an Inspector General for the CFPB and, upon confirmation, the Federal Reserve OIG would no longer be responsible for oversight of the CFPB.

H.R. 3770 would not change the overall amount of oversight responsibilities, but would transfer them from one agency to another. CBO estimates that transfer would have a net cost of $49 million over the 2015-2024 period, for two reasons. First, establishing a separate Inspector General's office for the CFPB would increase overall expenses for certain executive, administrative, and information technology functions, relative to the currently combined OIG. Second, CBO expects that the Federal Reserve OIG would shift a portion of the resources currently being used to fulfill its duties related to the CFPB to performing additional work related to operations of the Federal Reserve System.

Direct Spending

H.R. 3770 would limit the CFPB's spending for the Inspector General's office to two percent of the agency's annual funding. Based on information from the CFPB, CBO expects that level of funding would be sufficient to operate the office of the Inspector General. However, we expect that the funding limitation would reduce the volume of CFPB related audits and investigations undertaken by the CFPB OIG relative to the current workload of the currently combined OIG. CBO estimates that enacting H.R. 3770 would increase the agency's annual costs by about $10 million, on average, to support the Inspector General's activities, increasing direct spending by $100 million over the 2015-2024 period.

Revenues

When the CFPB was established, the Federal Reserve OIG became the Inspector General for both entities and experienced a significant increase in staff. The amount and rate by which the currently combined OIG would reduce its staff in response to the end of those responsibilities is uncertain because the staff currently are not separated into those who work solely on Federal Reserve issues and those who work solely on CFPB issues. Based in part on information provided by the current OIG and on historical staffing patterns that are publicly available, CBO expects that in response to the bill, the staff of the Federal Reserve OIG would be smaller than the currently combined OIG is today, but also that a portion of the resources currently being used to fulfill duties related to the CFPB would be shifted to performing additional work related to the Federal Reserve System. Overall, CBO estimates that enacting H.R. 3770 would increase remittances from the Federal Reserve to the Treasury and therefore federal revenues by $51 million over the 2015-2024 period.

PAY-AS-YOU-GO CONSIDERATIONS

The Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2010 establishes budget-reporting and enforcement procedures for legislation affecting direct spending or revenues. The net changes in revenues and outlays that are subject to those pay-as-you-go procedures are shown in the following table.
