About This Document

This Congressional Budget Office report was prepared at the request of the Chairman of the Senate Committee on the Budget. The report provides a framework for further analysis of the adequacy of retirement income, including income from particular sources such as Social Security benefits. In keeping with CBO's mandate to provide objective, impartial analysis, the report makes no recommendations.

Marina Miller of CBO's Health, Retirement, and Long-Term Analysis Division wrote the report with guidance from Julie Topoleski and David Weaver. Jessica Banthin, Linda Bilheimer, Molly Dahl, Nadia Karamcheva, Noah Meyerson, and John Skeen provided useful comments on various drafts of the report. Justin Lee provided fact-checking.

In addition, Michael Clingman of the Social Security Administration, Matthew Rutledge of the Center for Retirement Research at Boston College, and Mark Warshawsky, formerly of the Mercatus Center at George Mason University, provided helpful comments. (The assistance of external reviewers implies no responsibility for the final product, which lies solely with CBO.)

Wendy Edelberg and Jeffrey Kling reviewed the report, Loretta Lettner edited it, and Casey Labrack designed the cover and prepared the report for publication. The report and supplemental data are available on CBO's website (www.cbo.gov/publication/53191).
